Fisherman's Struggle With a Devilfish on Allen Street Wharf.

An immense squid took the bait of a fisherman casting his line from the Allen street wharf yesterday afternoon, and after a hard struggle was pulled out of the water.

Brook Anin, a part Chinese boy, was fishing from the lumberyard wharf with hook and line when he felt a pull at his an ulua. The line was a very stout one and Anin held on with might and main.

Unable to get the devilfish out of the water and fearing to be pulled in himself, the fisherman shouted for help, and several people, attracted by his cries, were soon on the scene and assisted the boy to pull the great octopus from the water.

The squid was taken to a nearby scale, and weighed fifteen pounds. Its length from tentacle to tentacle was over eight feet.

An old waterfronter who saw the squid said that it was the largest that has been caught in the harbor for at long time; in fact, the only one which has been taken with hook and line for Every now and then a report goes the rounds of a great squid which has been seen in the harbor, and about a year ago an octopus weighing well over twenty pounds was speared by torchlight near the Healani boathouse.

After the great kona of 1902, a section of a tentacle of a squid was found in the mass of seaweed which had accumulated in the harbor, which was as thick as a grown man's thigh. " Now and again immense squids are seen by the fishers along the reef, but they are usually left alone, for they are ugly customers to tackle, especially in a boat. One of the large octopi is known to haunt a seawall near Kaalawai, and is occasionally seen by fishermen toward the time of sunset. Its body is as big as a man's head, and it appears to fre-

M. Mochihata, a Japanese cane planter, of Kaumana, Hawaii, has been notified that he has drawn the ten thousand-dollar prize given by the San Francisco Examiner to one of its subscribers. He has been notified of the coming of the money, but refuses to believe that there is that much money in the world until he sees it piled up in front of him and can handle it. Not that Mochihata is a poor man, for the Scriptural maxim that to him that hath shall be given is proved in this case. He has over two thousand dollars saved up from the results of his labor already, and the prize money will make him a wealthy man.

Mochibata is one of the three or four hundred Japanese who take the Examner regularly, although unable to read a word of English, subscribing for that intellectual journal on the same basis that they buy che-fa tickets. So little does the winner of the premier prize know of English that he carried the letter of notification around with him for several days before he could get it translated, and it was several days more before he grasped the idea con-
